Glove EN Standards

European standards for protective gloves are generally represented by a shield-shaped pictogram (risk protection symbol) associated with a list of performance levels obtained at one or several tests in a laboratory.

In the collection of gloves in this catalogue the EN Standards that are dealt with are:

EN420	General Requirements
EN455	Requirements for single use medical gloves
EN388	Mechanical Risks
EN511	Risks with Cold
EN407 EN12477	Thermal Risks Heat and Fire Gloves for Welders
EN374-2	Micro-organic Risks
EN374-3	Chemical Risks
EN1186	Suitable for contact with food
ISO10819	Vibrations and Impacts

The digits after the EN code, or below the symbol, represent the lab test results. The higher the score the better the performance.

X denotes no test was carried out.

EN 374-3: Resistant to Permeation by Chemicals

This is where things get more interesting. EN 374-3 will do the same water test as in EN 374-2, but it will be done with any of three chemicals rather than water. The three test chemicals are any of the following, and will be represented by the letter in the table that corresponds with the chemical.

CHEMICAL	CODE LETTER	CHEMICAL	CODE LETTER
Methanol	A	n-Heptane	J
Acetone	B	Sodium hydroxide 40%	K
Acetonitrile	C	Sulphuric acid 96%	L
Dichloromethane	D	Nitric acid 65%	M
Carbon disulphide	E	Acetic acid 99%	N
Toluene	F	Ammonium hydroxide 25%	O
Diethylamine	G	Hydrogen peroxide 30%	P
Tetrahydrofuran	H	Hydrofluoric acid 40%	S
Ethyl acetate	I	Formaldehyde 37%	T
